"FUN 'N' STUFF"

Bobby shuffled his feet when he walked in a way that exasperated his mother. Finally she could stand it no longer.

"Bobby!" she scolded. "Will you please pick up your feet!"

"How can I?" the child asked, puzzled. "Every time I pick up the other one, the first one goes down."

* * *

When a friend of mine took her six-year-old son to a day nursery to be enrolled, the teacher brought out a long form and started asking questions about the child's birthplace, etc. Finally she came to a group of questions about the rest of the family.

"Does he have any older brothers?" she asked.

"No."

"Any younger brothers?"

"No."

"Older sisters?"

"No."

"Younger sisters?"

"No."

Young Johnny, who had been looking more and more unhappy during this dialogue, finally burst out wistfully: "But I've got friends!"

* * *

Teacher: "Tommy, where was the Declaration of Independence signed?"

Tommy: "At the bottom, I guess."

* * *

He couldn't have been more than five, and he was a pathetic little figure as he carried his valise down the front steps of his home. Around the block he trudged, and around again. He was still walking when it got dark and a policeman finally stopped him.

"What's the idea?" asked the officer.

"I'm running away," the lad said sadly.

"Look, I've had my eye on you," said the cop, "and you've been doing nothing but walking around the block. Do you call that running away?"

"Well, what do you want me to do?" cried the boy tearfully. "I ain't allowed to cross the street alone."

Little Willie, promoted to the third grade, met his second-grade teacher. "Oh, Miss Sullivan," he exclaimed, "I wish you were smart enough to teach me this year, too!"

* * *

When it came time for Little Archie to enter school, his doting mother approached the teacher with the request that her sensitive child never be punished. The teacher protested that such procedure would not be to the boy's advantage. The mother pondered this for a moment, then came up with a suggestion.

"If Archie misbehaves," she said, "just slap the boy next to him. That will frighten him."

* * *

The little boy peered over the edge of the stationery counter at the ten-cent store and asked hopefully: "Have you any blank report cards?"

* * *

Seven-year-old Jimmy answered the phone. A salesman was at the other end of the line. "Let me speak to your mother," he requested.

"Mom ain't home," replied Jimmy. "I'm just here with sister."

"Okay, put her on."

There followed a long period of silence. Finally, Jimmy returned to the phone.

"I'm sorry, mister," he said, "but I can't lift her out of the playpen."

* * *

A small boy, trying to explain the significance of his poor grades on the report card to his disgruntled father, pleaded, "Don't forget—we're studying all new stuff this year."

* * *

The nice old lady smiled at the little girl who had been left in charge of the pastry shop.

"Don't you sometimes feel tempted to eat one of the cream puffs, my dear?" she asked.

The little girl looked shocked. "Of course not—that would be stealing. I only lick them."
